Collective Witnessing

People often ask me why I choose the shows that the Playhouse produces. The truth is, I read many, many, many plays. Then I ask for recommendations of more plays from friends and collaborators, and I tune my ear to the underlying questions that are being asked around me.

The pieces that make the shortlist stir up something dormant in me; they make me question my judgments and reignite my passion for storytelling. I also ensure that I read the works of playwrights with diverse identities.

A series of difficult decisions are made, based on the Playhouse’s values, finding connections between what is happening in the community and following what speaks to the heart.

Then…

Self-doubt creeps in. The freedom I have to use my creativity to inform spaces for collective witnessing is a responsibility I take seriously. I question: ‘Why this show?’ and ‘How does it serve the community?’; ‘How does this community feel about this topic?’ A healthy amount of self-doubt is vital to my process because these plays are for you.

All the plays in the 2023 Season are about family, chosen, and blood. Generational thought patterns are being questioned in order to make space for more profound freedom from these ancestral issues. Each individual is grappling with identity and class. Each play a microcosm that echoes themes of the broader world in their specific times and places. These topics are what I feel are present.

Amidst these turbulent times, I still believe in the power of live storytelling—collective witnessing. As the next century of the Playhouse begins, we look forward to providing more authentic opportunities for people to come out of isolation and bring self-examination into self-care. Audience and Artist alike.

I hope these plays spark healing dialogue, ignite communal spaces with communication, and warm our hearts in deep humanity.

Reasons to Give

Santa Fe Playhouse produces plays that spark connections between audiences and artists, and start challenging conversations. Whether it's through the work on our stages, engaging with our community, or training the next generation of arts professionals, we strive to be a cultural hub for our city and an artistic home for all. Ticket sales account for a small portion of Santa Fe Playhouse's operating revenue each year. The bulk of our operating budget comes through contributions from government and foundation grants, and — most importantly — from individuals. Your philanthropy invests in the positive impact theater has on our community. Please join your neighbors, who boldly believe in the power of theater, and become a member of the Santa Fe Playhouse family today.

MAINSTAGE PRODUCTIONS: Every year Santa Fe Playhouse produces more than 150 performances and engages with over 10,000 patrons. Plays produced include classical texts as well as world- and New Mexico- premieres in our intimate 99-seat historic theater.

NEW PLAY DEVELOPMENT: From our New Play Reading Series to world premieres on the mainstage, and development workshops, Santa Fe Playhouse is committed to fostering the next generation of great playwrights.

SANTA FE FIESTA MELODRAMA: A Santa Fe tradition! Whether or not you adore theater, this engaging, interactive experience is a feel-good tradition that celebrates and critiques the town we can’t help but love.

EDUCATION PROGRAMS: Santa Fe Playhouse has been engaged in education and training for years with the Young Playwrights Program. Now, with the expanded and growing Playhouse Studio and the return of the Summer Youth Intensive, we are finding new ways to train and support New Mexico's theater-makers.

PARTNERSHIPS AND PRESENTATIONS: As owners of a historic theater in a historic barrio, we are committed to opening our doors to theater companies that do not have a home and want to collaborate. Partnerships are a vital way we support the thriving arts scene here in New Mexico.
